I do think carchasesfanatic has a point, if Stronghold doesn't agree with having this type of vehicle on the site, then why does he add this? He actually voted against it in the forum, what sense does adding this make in the first place? I disagree with people entering ridiculously random or poorly visible background vehicles, therefore I don't do it myself!

I tried to vote but was disallowed. Perhaps I don't have "administrator" privileges. Anyway, I say get rid of them! And let's use the democratic "vote" on these othetr, so-called "Movie Cars": (1) cartoon cars, (2) farm equipment, industrial machinery, military vehicles other than cars and trucks, (3) 2-wheel vehicles.

Yes, I also add cars that I don't like if they appear in a film, but that's different because they are still cars. This is a completely different TYPE of vehicle, and if you think it is questionable whether certain types of vehicle should be allowed, whether they are real or animated, why should you contribute to the mix? If suddenly it became perfectly legal to drop litter, but you disagreed, would you do it anyway? You said you disagreed with adding cartoons, so why did you add the Teenage Mutant Hero Turtles cartoon when none of the vehicles in it were drawn with any effort to resemble real models of cars and any resemblance they have to anything real is coincidental?

Star Wars Fanatic  2006-12-11 17:30 	Whilst there are now vehicles that deviate from cars, this is the Internet Cars Database after all, I do like the fact that other vehicles give the site a sense of completeness - it really is an amazing collection all in all. Yes this is the Internet Movie CARS database, but the Internet Movie Database (the spiritual father of this site) doesn't just cover films, it includes many kinds of television programs and even computer games as well. This site is primarily about cars but it is also about trucks, buses and bikes (and other types of land vehicle as well). Should we get rid of bikes and trucks as well? I don't think so. I can see how people think listing this is going too far, but then so far anything has been acceptable here as long as it's an independent land vehicle (ie. not something that runs on a track) that is designed for a person to ride and has it's own power (internal combustion or electric). -- Last edit: 2006-12-11 19:02:22
G-MANN 	The way I see it is if a vehicle is well used, then it deserves a mention (what I hate is when the vehicle has absolutely nothing to do with the film), that's why I first included the electric warehouse trolley in Austin Powers because it was part of a visual joke (the bit where he tries to turn the trolley around in a narrow corridor and ends

2006-12-11 19:14 	up getting completely stuck), then I decided to include all the other warehouse vehicles used in that movie. But in The Sopranos, there are some episodes where golf carts are briefly used when characters play golf, but I didn't bother including them because I felt there were plenty of vehicles already on the page and these weren't very important. The main argument I can think of against this is that these are only a variation of an electric wheelchair, which should by no means be listed.
DIEHARD  2006-12-11 20:24 	I do not think of this as a 'vehicle' in the way I think of other 'vehicles'. So I am against adding these wheelchairs. Although I think we have to be consistent. If we allow one, we should allow them all, if not we should not allow any....
antp  2006-12-11 22:05 	carchasesfanatic wrote Antoine that wasn't the main purpose of the website and you know it cause you've said it many times Main purpose of the site was not to list chases, but you asked me often to add a field to indicate if there was a chase Main purpose of the site was not to have long discussions, but there are still some on the site etc.
landrover1  2006-12-11 23:46 	somebody know a lot about bikes? because there's a lot of bikes to identify...I can identify golf cars and things like that...only because they are funny for me (even when I never rode one of them) mrcadillac  2006-12-12 04:59 	While on the topic of what to keep and what to scrap, I notice we have now SEVENTY PAGES of "unidentified" vehicles. Some obviously will never be identified by the current team of "experts"; I vote we SCRAP them. Others have been partly identified, usually (and at least) by the manufacturer's name; in most cases, no further identification is possible owing to a fuzzy picture or a lack of specific identification marks. I vote we move these to the appropriate "identified" section for vehicles of a particular make (the model and body style are not essential to the enjoyment of the database, especially if it can't be identified precisely. Opinions please !
antp  2006-12-12 10:56 	about unidentified ones: - some are clearly visible but not yet identified: it is better to keep them, someday they will be identified - some have a role in the movie: it is better to keep them too, I think, except if the role is minor and that they are really not identifiable - some can only get a make and not a model: after some time I remove the "unknown" of these and they keep only the make - some are background and not identifiable (blurry, small, ...): I delete them after few months I cleaned most of the entries older than 05/2006 (i.e. pages after 65 or something like that) -- Last edit: 2006-12-12 10:57:07 carchasesfanatic  2006-12-12 14:40 	I ask you for a field for chases just to know where the vehicle is used, so it's like the stars, it's not a "purpose", it is just more information about the vehicle, and discussions aren't a purpose either...don't know what that really has to do with this...
G-MANN  2006-12-12 14:59 	I think the reason there are so many unidentified vehicles is when a new film gets entered it quickly gets pushed down on the last completed movies list when new films are added, and it isn't too long before it drops off the list altogether and the film gets forgotten about before everything is identified. There's some vehicles I've added that I don't think are impossible to identify, it's just no one here recognizes them yet, particularly vintage cars. I think if something has at least a 2-star rating (which it is somewhat used in the action) it deserves identifying unless the visibility is so poor that identification is nearly impossible. There's nearly always a chance that something can be identified, in Clerks I entered the ambulance that takes Caitlin away (after she has sex with the dead guy in the toilet), only the back could be seen and box-style American ambulances you need to see the cab, but someone found the website for the paramedics group that used the ambulance and found out what it was from there. -- Last edit: 2006-12-12 15:02:33
antp  2006-12-12 15:04 	Note that all these unidentified cars are not so old: out of (now) 67 pages, only ~10 last pages contain cars added more than 6 months ago. So lots of these may still be identified within next months (but as new ones will be added, the number of pages will not decrease). There are also among the oldest unidentified cars that are very well visible, and for which I wonder how they are not yet identified (but all the time these are old cars, and I do not know anything to these 😊) -- Last edit: 2006-12-12 15:05:25

Even 2-star should be kept. In the old background ones, lots are actually quite well visible, so I still hope...

MrCadillac > why 12 months? btw only last page of "unknown" is more than 1 year old, that does not take so much web space 😊 (much less that the huge amount of blurry/small/useless identified background cars 🤖)
